What is EnergyCloud?

EnergyCloud is not all about selling batteries. The term itself—energy cloud—refers to a new, changing concept of the energy industry. The future of modern energy is based on connecting a large amount of decentralized local producers and operators of energy storage systems, as well as electricity producers and consumers, all working together through remote control and monitoring as virtual power plants.

These energy storage systems are used as home batteries in residential houses, while more powerful designs are used in industrial and commercial buildings as well as by distribution network operators.
